O N.E he Voice spoke again. Tremors of fear¼ excitement¼ and confusion coursedthrough E K. Sail s body as he listened to the instructions. Asan Indian¼ he grew up believing in spirits and the spiritworld¼ but this was a new experience¼ For almost a year thisstrange Voice had been speaking¼ guiding his activities¼ tak-ing more and more control. For the past six days¼ The Voicehad scarcely stopped speaking during Sari s every momentawake. Only in sleep did he find peace.At times the East Indian tried not to listen; he hummedor chanted¼ but such diversions made no difference.The Voice persisted¼ coming from inside his head. Yet Sariknew the source was not from within himself. \I do not knowwhat to do¼\ he said aloud. \I do not know how you cameinto my head¼ and you leave me most thoroughly confused.\"\"You have not chosen meï¼Œ\" The Voice saidï¼Œ\"but I have cho-sen you. And [x~cause I have chosen youï¼Œ I will also lead you.\" \"Yesï¼Œ yes . . . let it be soï¼Œ\" Sari saidï¼Œ weariness evi-dent in his tone. \"I can no longer fight you. I shall go mad if Ido not listen.\"
