You read for all kinds of reasons: to send your mind on an exciting or scary adventure to learn about your favorite athlete or movie star and even to see what ingredients are in your cereal. Soon you will be asked to take a state reading test. The test will ask you to read all kinds of things: made-up stories (fiction); passages about real people places and events (nonfiction); and tables charts graphs or maps (visual information sources). You might read a biography of an interesting person a poem about a kid facing a new challenge or an article about a recent scientific discovery. After each passage you will be asked several questions about what you have read. Hey! Where Are We Going? Blast Off on Florida Reading! Book 5 is about to take you on a journey through the state reading test. We ll

you what to expect on the test--the kinds of passages and questions you ll see. We ll also give you tips to help you answer the different types of questions you ll
see on the test.
Along the wayi¼E you ll review basic reading skills.
This will help you on the test and in the reading you do just for fun. By the end of our journeyi¼E you will think of the state reading test as simply a way to show off
your reading skills.
Ready? Let s go[
