Book Description This book describes and analyzes how a child's interaction with family, school, peer groups, media and community influences his or her developmental outcome. Professionals working with children and students studying child sociology need to understand the effects of contexts in which children develop and how multi-factors interact to affect child development. About the Author Roberta Berns is a Professor Emerita at the University of California, Irvine, as well as at Saddleback College, where she founded and chaired the Human Development

Department. Berns also was a student of the renowned developmental psychologist, Urie Bronfenbrenner, at Cornell University. Now, she is married and living in California with her husband, who is a professor of biology and bioengineering. They have two married children and two grandchildren. --This text refers to the Hardcover edition.
