Chapter
 One
 Sister ANNY ALLOWAY WALKED down University Place through the polluted golden haze of Indian summer in New York City. She was headed for the most important lunch of her life. At one o'clock she was due at the Charcuterie to meet the managing editor of a newspaper. And some paper--Downtown.
 Gadfly to the powerful and corrupt a ragout peppered with four-letter words. Downtown was the country's hottest weekly. It had launched many a star into orbit. It also paid writers shit.

 Never mind
 why niggle over nickels when about to get discovered?
 Anxiously Anny paused before the window of Phil's Head Shop to check out her image. Wrong she'd excavated from her closet^{1/4} thinking to create the illusion of a professional^{1/4} merely presented a woman in a time warp. Lunch among the hip in 1973 called for Levi's^{1/4} Frye boots^{1/4} nipplenoser chiffon. She tucked a rebel wisp into her pale crown of
