Preface
This anthology began as a joint project with Rosalind Pollack Petchesky. At a very early stage when we had only just begun to discuss what might be included she had to leave me alone with the project because of her new and very demanding job. I am keenly aware that the benefit of her intellectual rigor and knowledge combined with the mutual learning that can occur in such a team project would have made this a better book. My own thinking on this subject as reflected in my first essay and in the choice of articles has been influenced not only by Ros Petchesky but also by many other friends and colleagues with whom I have discussed these issues at levels of abstraction ranging from a discussion about "the state" with graduate students here at the University of Wisconsin to mutterings about the daily news. I would like particularly to thank Rosalyn Fraad Baxandall, Johanna Brenner, Lisa Brush, Elizabeth Ewen, Smart Ewen, Martha Fineman, Nancy Fraser, Ed Friedmani, Susan Stanford Friedmani, Alien Hunter, Nancy Isenberg, Alice Kessler-Harris, Judith Walzer Leavitt, Gerda Lerner, Sara McLanabani, Nancy MacLean, Ann Orloff, Kathryn Sklar, Susan Smith, Susan Traverse, Susan Ware, and Ann Withom. To some authors whose work is included here I have special debts: Nancy Fraser¹⁴ Jane Jenson¹⁴ and Gwendolyn Mink rewrote their articles for this anthology. Elizabeth Schneider allowed me to cut her article drastically. Jane Jenson allowed me to lop off a theoretical introduction that was very dear to her and turned herself into an American historian at my pleading. Teresa Amott produced her essay especially for this collection. Frances Fox Piven and Richard Cloward¹⁴ unintentionally¹⁴ gave me¹⁴ in their impressive oeuvre on welfare¹⁴ not only a model of committed scholarship but an argument against which I was able to develop my own feminist analysis.
