ONE
T he city was beginning to look deserted. Everybody who could afford to go to Florida was in Florida. My mother and father were in Florida my brother Sam
the surgeon was in Florida
my cousin Melvyn
the lawyer
was in Florida. Even the radio announcer who usually reads the local weather was in Florida. I can remember a time when Melvyn couldn't even read the time. I taught him. Now he was in Florida sitting by a swimming pool getting a tan all over his hairy body while Benny Cooperman
was here in Grantham.
No matter how I examined it I couldn't make it come out looking fair. The coldest part of the winter with starlings and sparrows falling stiff from the trees frost creeping under my door and climbing the stairs two at a time and I sat here waiting for a client to read my sign: \"Benjamin Cooperman\"½½ Licensed Private Investigator\"½½ and come in asking me to½½ solve the sudden disappearance of a long-lost rich uncle.½½ ½½ Nothing easier½½ in the middle of February: he s gone to½½ Florida.½½ From the window I could look down on St. Andrew½½ Street. The black pavement was chilled white½½ the frosty breath½½ of the manholes rose straight up. Not a drop of snow as far as½½ the eye could see; somehow that made it look even colder. I½½ tried to find the evidence for cold without snow½½ just to kill the½½½½
