CHAPTER 1
Messenger Boy
The sky was clear and the air felt crisp as twelve-year-old Matthew Talbot walked briskly down the narrow streets of Dublin. He was excited today and felt grown up as he hurried toward the company of Edward and John Burke's wine merchants. The boy stopped at the edge of the property and let his eyes survey his new place of employment. What Matt was doing was not unusual for the son of poor Irish parents. He wanted to work to help support the family. Besides his year of schooling with the Christian Brothers had been enough school to last him for a lifetime he had decided. He could read and write if he struggled and forced himself beyond what he wanted to. But nowschool was finished for him and he was going to dosomething important.As Matt approached the Burke Company office¼ hecould imagine the face of his mother glowing with pride ashe would bring home his first pay. He imagined the joy hisfather would feel at Matt s accomplishment. He knew hisfather would whisper to Mrs. Talbot that their son wasmature far beyond his years. It was a good feeling to begrown up.
