As my twentieth year as bishop of Milan draws to a close and I enter my seventy-third year I offer this book that I began in February of 1998. At the time I believed that my age and my sufficiently long experience had qualified me to look back and draw some reflections on the all-important subject of the body. While my heavy load of pastoral commitments prevented me from finishing the book earlier it is also true that one's reflections on subjects such as these can never be complete. As I was writing these pages I realized how very little I could say on the subject and how much still remains to be said and clarified. Although I received much help and suggestions from experts and friends I know that this work is woefully incomplete. Nevertheless I would like to attempt to write something about the complex reality that is the human body in which and around which everything happens and which is the subject of so many theories conflicting attitudes and arguments.
