FOREWORD
Dr. Perry Robins is President of The Skin Cancer Foundation and an experienced dermatologic surgeon who has pioneered the Mohs micrographic surgical technique for the treatment of cancers of the skin. In this book he explains in layman's terms the devastating effects that radiation from the sun can produce in the skin. While the emphasis of this book is on precancers and cancers of the skin, it also delves into other important consequences of too much exposure to the sun, namely, photosensitive skin diseases and "photoaging." Photoaging is a combination of blotchy discolorations of the skin, wrinkling, and sagging tissues, all of which combine to produce prematurely "aged" skin. The fundamental message from Dr. Robins is that the down side of exposure to solar radiation can be prevented.
