The bathroom as we know it today is a phenomenon of the 20th century. Until indoor plumbing became common, a bathroom was just that -- a room in which one took a bath. Most homes, however, did not even have such a space. A bathtub was stored in a shed and dragged in for the Saturday night bath -- usually in the kitchen in front of the stove. Modern bathrooms became common and nearly universal in the early part of the 20th century. In older homes, closets were converted into bathrooms. In new homes, space was allotted for the tub, the toilet, and the lavatory. It was a utilitarian spa -- the only luxury was that it was indoors. Hollywood elevated that bathroom in the 1920's. The stars of elegant movies took elegant bubbling baths in marble tubs, sunken tubs, screened tubs, and arched tubs. From that point on, America
