Preface Some fifteen years ago the Boone and Crockett Club commissioned James B. Trefethen to write a history of the club from its inception in 1887 under the tutelage of Theodore Roosevelt until the beginning of the sixth decade of this century. Mr. Trefethen, an associate member of the club and a professional wildlife specialist with the Wildlife Management Institute, immediately plunged into the research for his project and he soon realized that the task was larger and more complex than envisioned by the club's leadership. It has become obvious to the Boone and Crockett Club that the world's awareness of today's conservation and wildlife problems is vastly stronger, more immediate, more urgent, and better informed than it was in 1961. It has become equally apparent that it is time to restate and enlarge the history of the conservation movement in light of the rush of development and change in the last fifteen years. Fortunately, Jim Trefethen is still here to lend his wonderfully tuned VII
