Sandra Martz once again captures the experiences of women, young and old, as they make choices that form the tapestry of their lives.

This popular companion volume to When I Am an Old Woman I Shall Wear Purple focuses on the decisions, public and private, that shape women's lives. Inspired by the title poem in which an older woman looks back on a life sensibly lived and wishes she had "eaten more ice cream and less beans," anthologist Sandra Martz once again captures the experiences of women, young and old, as they make choices that form the tapestry of their lives.
