Shannon was about to tell him--as she had not told him a half hour before--\"Stick it!\" when like the Che-shire cat her editor vanished and she became aware that on the stairs much too close to her was this basket-ball player or descendant of a Watusi chief.
A sharp pain--as the thin gold chain dug into her neck by way of leave-taking. And it was gone! As was he sprinting down to the bottom of the stairs where he stopped for a moment turned and smiled up at her. And was gone again.
Rubbing her neck
she opened her mouth to yell and closed it. Can you imagine? I m too embarrassed to scream. \" Gee
lady you shouldn t be wearing no gold even a little-bitty thing like that outside you know. \" I know. I know. I asked for it. It s my fault right? No wonder the bastard was smiling. Jesus it's what a place to live. She felt for the chain to make sure it was really gone. And she saw the loping thief's black head chopped from
