Chapter 1
>The Garden Guide
> JANUARY
>Winter is the gardener's seed-time for ideas. When the labors of >the year press and the mind is burdened with the daily chores and >details of gardening, many an idea may occur to you but you must >wait until winter to develop them. Then your mind may be freshly >enriched from books and contacts with good friends.
>Air cellars well on warm moist days. Keep clean and watch >the appearance of fresh rat holes, all of which close with broken >bottles and cement mortar.
>Protect roots against frost. Sprinkle a handful or two of salt >around posts likely to be heaved by the frost, picking out the ice >to the ground in a little groove close to the post. Whatever is frozen and liable to injury by frost >thaw very slowly. Put vegetables or apples into ice cold water.
>Make manure under cover. Do not let it freeze. This is the manure harvest and as much should be gathered as possible. Compost with muck or earth. Keep the manure heap moist and compact and level. If it touches the outside of any building clear it away at once.
