HOW GOOD ARE THE POSSIBILITIES Historian-philosopher Bertrand Russell was mere-ly reporting the history of human mating when he wrote: "Man is not a solitary animal." Since Biblical times (and probably before) men and women have sought the comfort and companionship of the opposite sex ~ for one reason or another the first mate disappeared~ there were often new alliances. So remarriage or whatever it was ~lled in the particular milieu has been an integral part of the fabric of many cultures since time immemorial. Perhaps the methods of choosing mates -- first~ second and even third -- were different in other eras but today s mating games are played out in numerous arenas and under many circumstances much different from the selection processes of the past. I doubt if anyone in western cultures now follow the Biblical injunction that a man marry his brother's widow; nor does a father choose his daughter's bridegroom. Maybe empire and politics still have a role in some instances (the few surviving monarchies for example) but even that idea is being relegated to history.
