Chapter I
tops of the plateaus. Some fishers did brave the !
that the goddess Oceana set upon the watersi¼Œ their belay lines holding them fasti¼Œ they netted and fishi¼Œ which they feasted on alonei¼Œ for above cliffs were sheathed in ice.
An enterprising merchanti¼Œ Baltsar by namei¼Œ and an ad venturer at hearti¼Œ had rigged a hoist that raised basketi¼Œi¼Œ of fish and kelp from the fishers caves past the ice-bounc portion of the cliffsi¼Œ to the plateau where the goods were counted and credited to the fisher below who had filled it.
In this manner the tableland cityi¼Œ short on supplies aftei a war-fiUed summeri¼Œ augmented winter moss-stewsi¼Œ which were our sustenance until the causeway to the lowlands was built in later years.
I first met Baltsar at his hoisti¼Œ in my sixteenth winter.
