THUNDER AND LIGHTNING. A HEATH
>ABOUT TO BE BLASTED.
Throughout
that sullen dayi¼Œ cannon had spoken from time to time between the confronting armies.
Otherwise there was no move of war. First Rupert waited for the Yorkshiresmen; afterward he waited for morningi¼Œ aware that meanwhile hungeri¼Œ and memory of the defeats he had already dealt themi¼Œ would gnaw his enemies for him.
But as evening drew ini¼Œ clouds massed blue-black across heaven. A wind hooted bleak beneathi¼Œ snickering in the whins.
The gloom flared and banged. Now God lets loose His own artilleryi¼Œ went
