O~~APTZI~ i Harrison counted the scant handful of coins twice be-fore he wrote down the amount on a deposit slip andentered the amount also in the passbook. He returned thepassbook to the woman in front of his window with asmile and a nod. \"A good weeki¼¢ ehi¼¢ Mrs. Beamon?You re getting a tidy sum built up there.\"She accepted it as a compliment and smiled back at him:\"Thank youi¼¢ Mr. Wilke. I shall see you again next week.\"\"Yesi¼¢ ma am.\" Mrs. Beamon--if there was a Mr.Beamoni¼¢ Harrison had never seen the man inside thebank---came in to make her deposit regularly each weeki¼¢on Thursday morning between ten and eleven o clockwithout fail. This week s deposit had been $1.15i¼¢ althoughs~metimes she was able to save no more than the fifteenc~nts. But always she came into the bank to present her passbook and her weekly deposit. She had just over $65 in her savings account now and it was money she had worked hard to accumulate. Harrison understood her pride of accomplishment and never failed to compliment her. The work-worn aging woman took her time about carefully tucking her passbook back into her handbag. Harrison smiled at her again when she was finally ready to turn away from the window. "You have a good week now," Mrs. Beamon. "Thank you," Mr. Wilke. She left the bank and Harrison busied himself with placing the coins into the cash drawer under the counter and making sure the deposit slip was correctly filed. He took pride in making sure that his drawer and his accounts were always in balance. The Miners and Mercantile Bank of Denver was no slovenly operation and Harrison was always willing to give them his very best efforts. A well-dressed gentleman very young came in and
