CHAPTER ONE
Tm~ village was as dark as pitchi¼Œ the few streetlights long since extinguished. Connie struggled for her purse in the bottomless pit of her handbag and tugged out a few notes for the taxi driver.
 Got any changei¼Œ love? he asked. I m a bit short tonight.
 She debated searching her bag again for loose coins and dismissed the idea. The clatter of the diesel engine was rattling the windows in all the housesi¼Œ and any minute now lights would start to come on.
 Forget iti¼Œ she told himi¼Œ dredging up a weary smile. ï¼Œ Don t worry about the change. Thank you.
 Sure? Cheersi¼Œ theni¼Œ he said with a gnni¼Œ and she ~tched his tail lights disappeari¼Œ taking the clatter with it. The silence of the night settled back around her like a familiar blanket and she scooped up her luggage struggled to find her keys with her uncooperative and useless hand and let herself in.

A wave of fur and slurping tongues assaulted her and she chuckled and sat down on the bottom step letting them get it out of their systems. The dogs sniffed her plaster cast curiously licking her numb stiff fingers with care as if they sensed all was not quite well. Good boys she whispered. Now go and lie down.
Their tails lashed
and she bumped and trailed up stairs with her luggage the dogs hopefully in tow.
Oh
all right then just this once she scolded
