On a cold December night, two members of an international terrorist organization meet at a French Quarter restaurant in New Orleans to finalize plans for one of the deadliest attacks ever on the United States of America: a release of the smallpox virus during the upcoming Super Bowl at the New Orleans Superdome. A beautiful young woman joins them the next day at a remote fishing camp on Lake Pontchartrain, selected by the cell leader as the perfect headquarters and hiding place for their activities. Masterminded by a powerful, reclusive terrorist leader whom the United States government believes to be dead, it's the attack America thought would never happen and is woefully ill-prepared to handle.

Margaret Lawhon creates a fast-paced thriller that takes you from the bank
