With the exception of Billy Budd, which Melville wrote in his old age, the tales in this volume were written in the years between 1852 and 1856. During these years Melville was living on his farm, "Arvowhoad," at Pittsfield, Massachusetts, with his wife and (by 1855) his four children. Melville's tales are o~ course interesting in themselves and quite apart from the personal career of their author--interesting, that is, for their successes and failures of language, structure, plot, and symbolization, as well as for their general qualities of sensibility and intelligence, and it is these successes and failures which must count most heavily with us as we read the tales and form our opinions of them.
