To every family there comes a time when someone who is ill or injured or convalescent must be, or could be, taken care of at home. An illness may be so trivial and fleeting that no special nursing skill is needed, other than placating an irritable and grumpy patient who isn't sick enough to be tractable. Other illnesses may be chronic, prolonged, require rearrangement of a room of the house, perhaps some special equipment, and unremitting care of a bedfast patient. For many illnesses, of course, hospital care is mandatory, at least in the acute stages.
