Honor is a word and a concept that seems to be largely missing from our society. In his new book HONOR'S REWARD, John Bevere reestablishes the importance and application of this principle and the human dignity which results. Contrary to popular modern thought, John says we can expect the best blessings and ultimate reward from giving respect and showing deference to those around us. He outlines the relational aspects of this concept by explaining that honor should be a part of how we treat one another. By clearly defining what we expect from others and what they expect from us, we are able to begin giving honor to those in our lives. In his fresh and challenging style, John uses illustrations and biblical explanation to show how we should honor not only our God and our parents, but all those in authority over us as well as those over whom we have authority. He further illuminates the immediate and lasting benefits which flow from doing so.
