deeply rooted in the tradition of African American artistic expression, these lyrical poems are provocative and revelatory. They remind us that black poetry is not only a legitimate literary genre but that it is life as we have experienced it for generations ,and the challenges we still face. Okantah leads us to the rediscovery in ourselves of a history we have always known"

--Naomi Long Madgett, Poet Laureate, City of Detroit

"Reconnecting Memories is a stirring collection of poems that highlight the communal links in among the people of the African Diaspora ,and addresses the pains and troubles of today's society. Okantah's strong and poignant words will reverberate inside your head as he reminds us of our sorrowful past ,and of the ordeals of the present, in the section, "Poet's Lament; contemporary issues. When he speaks of love in the section, "Black Love" his poems are touching and bittersweet. It is in the section, "New Afrikan," where he reconnects us to our roots and shows that the past holds promise for the future. This collection of poetry is a must-have for those who appreciate well-crafted words that will reach deep into your heart, mind, and soul."

"Reconnecting Memories challenges us to close generational divides, gn beneath the surface of consumer culture, overturn the contradictions of American democracy and rediscover ourselves.

Finally, a poetry missive that bridges the gap between the Black Arts Movement and the
