This honest book, with its warm yet unsparingly candid photos, reveals the innermost hopes and dreams of a poor black family living in the heart of one of the richest counties in the United States. Rena, the mother, is a frank, hardworking woman. She wants her youngest child and only son to grow up strong, but, because her life has been far from easy, she tends to be too protective. Her husband, Big John, is a seasonal construction worker whose main worry is providing for his family. Although he argues with his teen-age daughter's militant young friends over how to achieve a better life, he has to admit that passive ways haven't gotten the black man very far.
