INTRODUCTION

When an accident ended my first career--as a

dancer--I was stunned and disappointed, but I was not confused. There was never any doubt in my mind as to what I would do next. For even as a child, exposed for the first time to the magical transformations that took place backstage, I had always been fascinated by makeup, by the shadings, textures, and colors that could turn actresses and dancers into whomever they wanted to be. And although friends tried to dissuade me, it was no use; after a period of formal study in cosmetics and an apprenticeship working behind the counter, I opened my own one-woman salon.

Now, nearly two decades later, I know that there are no "accidents." It was my destiny to indulge women s fantasies with color, to bring out their beauty with healthy natural cosmetics. But although I began less than twenty years ago, it might as well have been the dark ages. Color choices were incredibly limited (earth tones were "in"
