This timely and compelling book demonstrates how the American process of governance has fallen out of sync with the problems the United States government is trying to solve. With almost any recent domestic concern - waging a war, protecting food supply and borders, providing health-care coverage for an ageing population or relief after a devastating hurricane - the standard response has been to out-source most of the core tasks to thousands of independent contractors. The US government foots the bill but this strategy provides neither leadership nor accountability. Donald F. Kettl asks who, without anyone in charge, can formulate innovative solutions to the increasingly complex problems the government faces. He has answers, explaining with precision and clarity how a twenty-first-century government must function in order to provide real solutions to the policy problems that face the US.
