More often than not integrated with other functions, bars and restaurants provide a new arena of experimentation for interior design, prompting new solutions and linguistic devices, in line with the general trend that has fostered a wholesale redefinition of places and venues appointed for social mixing and leisure time. From the point of view of both interior design and communication, bars and restaurants mirror new trends in social behavior, and consequently address a complex range of expectations that involves conflating various distinctly different disciplines, producing a kaleidoscopic panorama of linguistic stimuli.
