Vessel Commander First Rank Galen Diettinger, of the Sauron Fleet Heavy CruiSer Fomoria, stirred slightly in the command seat, waiting for the lag effect of jump to wear off. As his vision cleared,, Dietfinger realized he could make oul more details of the bridge than he nfight have liked. Fire had blackened a third of the room. while smoke still drifted lazily in the red glow of the combat lights. Somehow, they had made it. In Dietfinger's mind was an image of the Homeworld as they had jumped. Firestorms and mushroom clouds pockmarked the land. Even the seas roiled as the Imperial ships sought out the undersea cities. A great red wound ran along the main continent of Lebensraum as the Imperial assaults split the planet's erus~, while in the space above, the bright lights of the homeland's hopelessly oumunthered fleet pulsed as each ship died. All but one.

"Position, sir," Navigation announced.

"Speak."
