Robert Ludlum hits the road again! In this hilariously funny thriller. America's master of suspense resurrects his two most outrageous characters, General MacKenzie Lochinvar Hawkins--the Hawk--and Harvard-trained legal wizard Sam Devereaux, who were last sighted attempting to kidnap the pope in Ludlum's great comic best-seller The Road to Gandolfo.

A former general of the army, twice winner of the Congressional Medal of Honor and a military legend misunderstood by military and civilian authorities alike, the Hawk studies the yellowed pages he has razor-sliced out of a volume in the sealed government archives. His leather-lined face is creased in triumph: He has the bastards! "Roll those caissons!" he swears under his breath as he strides out of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. "It'll take some time, but get ready for me, you beautiful Wopotamis!"

Twenty-one months pass, but nobody is ready for the Hawk in the magnificent headdress of Thunder Head, chief of the Wopotamis. According to the treaty in Hawk's possession, this impoverished Indian tribe owns all the territories within the flights of a thousand arrows in and around Omaha, Nebraska—including the massive global headquarters of the Strategic Air Command. The law is perfectly clear, even to the strictest constructionists: Any and all improvements made on illegally possessed or usurped property rightfully belong to the original owners.

SAC! The biggest defense enchilada of them all!
