Josephine Brennon was untapped depths of emotion. Crazy and unexpected as it was Hannibal wanted to lay down with her. in the room right above them. He had no business thinking what he was thinking, but being rational was the last thing on his mind. He wanted to make love to a woman he had no idea existed until this day. Something about the woman who sat across from him felt one hundred percent right.

"You shouldn t have hired me. Josephine."

His voice was heavy with sorrow. Even if she would have him in her bed. he was a drifter. Drifters never stayed in one place for long.

Her smile never changed. It was her eyes he could not read. She made her question smmd like an absurdity.

"Are you a criminal?"

"No."

"Did you run away from your responsibilities?"

"If you mean a wife and kids,no."

With mystery in her eyes, she measured the power in his hands. Slowly, Josephine smiled until her whole face lit up, Hannibal s heart stuttered. The brightness of her smile transformed her face. Her smile drew him to her with the promise of a thousand secret pleasures. She leaned across the supper table to touch one knuckle of his band with the tip of an index finger.

"I believe I chose well."
