For CBS correspondent Dan Rather, known to millions of TV viewers as the co-editor of "60 Minutes" and currently as chief editor of "Who's Who," it all began in an obscure Texas college. There a professor had assigned Dan and his fellow students the works of a courageous broadcast journalist. "For the working reporter," the teacher demanded, "what is the most important thing Elmer Davis said?" There was silence in the classroom. Finally the teacher told them: "Don't let the bastards scare you."

It was a lesson Dan Rather never forgot--in Vietnam and in Washington during the heartbreak and shame of Watergate, or while covering the assassinations of John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King, Jr., or climbing into the mountain fastness of Tibet to capture for the first time on film the armed soldiers of the People's Republic of China. Now in his candid and charming book, Mr. Rather brings alive the fascinating world
