From Texas City to headlining at Gilley's in Pasadena, Texas, Johnny Lee worked his way up as a country music performer, winning his own loyal following. When producers for the movie Urban Cowboy came to town, Johnny landed a part in the film and recorded several songs for the soundtrack. The roller-coaster ride began, from the triple platinum album Urban Cowboy to his own LP, Lookin" For Love.

Johnny became an instant celebrity and international artist. Every song was in the Top Ten: "One in a Million," "Picking Up Strangers," "Prisoner of Hope," "Bet Your Heart On Me," "You Could ve Heard a Heart Break," "Hey Bartender," and "Cherokee Fiddle."

Through success professionally and his marriage to Dallas actress Charlene Tilton, Johnny had it all. Then the roller-coaster went down. From record producers who only wanted to copy the sound of one song, financial mismanagement of the success, and a divorce that was played out in the headlines of tabloids, the ride down was as fast and furious as it was going up.

Now living in Pebble Beach, California, recently married, and with a new album on Curb Records (New Directions), Johnny is
