In the grand tradition of Artbur Hailey and Barbara Taylor Bradfbrd comes Towers, a sweeping, multi-generational novel of two dynastic real estate families--the Northernns and the Eichenbergs--their fortunes, their loves, the powerplays they win and lose. From the boardrooms and bedrooms of the most spectacular buildings in the world their epic story is lit with the flame of passion and conflict, climaxing with the most ambitious real estate development ever.

We follow the Eichenbergs and the Northerns from the loss of their vast European estates in war-torn Austria in 1866 to the brawling new world of America. There they rise separately from the ruins to lead the construction of a new nation, and with it, separate visions of genius that often explosively interlock. But for all their unimaginable wealth and power, their personal worlds hold twisted, interweaving tragedies, until, ultimately, the last generation triumphs in love, capping a passionate riotous century in which men and women of both families build their towers to challenge the heavens.
