This bold and romantic suspense story is in the spirit of Mary Stewart and Daphne Du Maurier. It captures the people of the rugged Cornish coast in a time of savage storms and wild beauty, shipwreckers and press gangs, old feuds and family secrets. The exciting eighteenth-century romance begins as Julie, a protected Londoner, comes to Cornwall as

Ben Polventon's bride. His return from the Continent at his father's death was swiftly followed by their wedding. But Julie, though very much in love, knows the marriage arranged in their youth is one Ben would never have made had the choice been his. Polventon, an estate in ruins, does not welcome the newlyweds. Though Ben will be heir, the seaside farm is owned by a murderous pirate. Their new home abounds in mysterious and strange happenings. The excise men think Polventon is headquarters for a smuggling and shipwrecking ring. The nearby village offers neither safety nor friendship - the people harbor bitter memories of one from Polventon whose treachery led to the transporting of husbands and sons
