VINCENT BELLINO is a plain-spoken, traditionally educated, straight-arrow psychiatrist who grew up on the asphalt playgrounds of New York City. Patricia Patterson is an outspoken, Berkeley-bred, thoroughly liberated psychiatric social worker from the sandy beach-heads of free-spirited California. Between them, they run St. Dymphna's Mental Health Clinic, an operation that by comparison would make the fabled M*A*S*H* unit look like the Johns Iloplkins Medical Center.

Staffed by a ragtag assortment of professionals and assistants from every part of the world and every economic level, the clinic treats everything from gifted college students with
