The photocopier has often been credited with "revolutionizing" office work, but it's never been acknowledged as the cause of a revolution in office humour. Until now. For with the dawn of the copier came a proliferation of cartoons, jokes, spoofs, fables, and satires about life at the office. Hardly a day has passed since the first machine was plugged in, that some company comic hasn't sneaked up to it to run off ten copies of the latest piece of underground humour.

Workers have always poked fun at the boss, the workplace, their jobs, the system, and themselves. Anonymously, Swivel-Chair Philosophers and Coffee-Break Cartoonists have verbally and pictorially folded, spindled, and mutilated every aspect of the 9 to 5 haul. Who are these mysterious wise guys and girls? No one knows. They're folk humorists in three-piece suits. Sit-down comics in silk blouses and designer jeans. Corporate hecklers in overalls.

No business or industry is safe. Anonymous office humour has shown up in High-Tech puzzle palaces, farm machinery factories, teachers staffrooms, church vestries, TV newsrooms and salesmen's sample cases. No underground network of radical pamphleteers could hold a candle to the distribution network of these silly subversives. Some of our examples have been found ~ts close as the corner petrol station and as far away as a prestigious bank in Brisbane, Australia.

Here, for the first time, is a collection of the best in anonymous office humour. If you've ever worked in an office, if you've ever had a boss, if your career, financial future, and mental health have ever been in the hands of "upper management", you're going to feel at home in these pages.
