When Clyde Bumpus was found shot dead in his boat on the Kentucky River, there were few residents of Humber Falls who were unhappy. There were, indeed, several with various reasons to qualify as suspects. Interrogated about her husband's murder, Shirley Anne Bumpus said, "Well, we weren't exactly Tristan and Isolde." And she did have a boy friend in her guest house. But she also had an alibi. So did he. So did the shopping-center promoter who'd been double-crossed by the victim. So did his discarded secretary-cum-mistress.

With no clue other than a baby blue Volkswagen, the two-man Homicide Squad of little Humber Falls was becoming discouraged. Then a second murder, that of the proprietor of the Studio One nightclub, gave the case a whole new twist.
