Earl Emerson first won acclaim for his Thomas Black series of mysteries (The Rainy City, Poverty Bay, Nervous Laughter, Fat Tuesday and Deviant Behavior)Critics said they were "taut and vivid" (Los Angeles Times), "intriguing and fast-paced" (New York Daily News). and called Emerson "one of the best of the new private--eye novelists" (Chicago Sun-Times).

In 1988 Emerson introduced a new hero--firefighting detective Mac Fontana in Black Hearts and Slow Dancing. Library Journal raved that the book was "easily as good as Elmore Leonard's Glitz," and The New York Times called it "an expert, readable job, with a likable hero," and picked it as one of the notable mysteries of the year.

Help Wanted: Orphans Preferred is Mac Fontana's eagerly awaited second outing an exciting mix of firefighting, action, suspense, and murder.

The trouble begins when one of Fontana's men dies unexpectedly at the station house. A preliminary investigation reveals the cause of death to be rat poison.

It seems someone was trying to offstage the fire department by poisoning lunch, and the victim was unlucky enough to sneak a bite before sit-down.
