Let the hands-down expert on mutual funds show you how "defensive" investing always wins the day-no matter what the economy or market is doing.

Michael Hirsch will tell you never to confuse investing with football. Says Hirsch, "Although Coach Vince Lombardi may claim that the best defense is an offense, this rarely works in investing. For one thing, investing takes place not over 60 playing minutes, but over an open-ended period. You don't know at what point you're entering the game--nor when you'll be leaving it." Hirsch will also teach you to screw your head on backwards, distinguish a star from a nova, watch out for the "fund du jour," realize that Barnum was right, recognize the Don Quixote search for the all-weather manager, and know that what's once a tortoise is always a tortoise. But what he's really talking about is constructing a "bullet-proof" mutual fund portfolio--one that will keep your money growing even in the worst of economic times. One that won't let you down--no matter what the market is doing.
