As boisterous and tender as a fistfight at an Irish family reunion, this gripping novel confronts industrialist father and priest son in a generational conflict about family loyalty, conscience, and the choice that each must make between love and power.

The father, millionaire E B. Kinsella, has ridden the star of an accidental torture found on the eve of the Depression, by making deals with God and everyone else and has never questioned his right to both.

The son, University of Notre Dame President Thomas Kinsella, a generation away from the father in ideals and calling, is forced to make an agonizing choice: will Thomas choose human love from actress Maria Moore or the Cardinal's hat that goes with the Vatican's offer to become the new Archbishop of Chicago?
