The third in the series, this volume offers expert assessments of needs, trends, and challenges in the international political risk insurance industry from the investor, financial, insurance, broker, and analytical communities. It examines the lessons that can be learned from recent investment losses, insurance claims, and arbitrations and considers what the future may hold for coverage of project finance projects in emerging markets. It concludes by reconsidering both old and new political risk insurance products and innovations that international investors can utilize to mitigate political risk abroad.
