Chroniclers of the American West believe French trappers were the first Europeans to see North Park, the first to tromp through its lush meadows and scale its forested slopes in search of pelts, which they found aplenty. It is in the midst of this park, in the shadow of Deadman Peak in the Rockies, that Gideon

Coopersmith founded the Double Circle C Ranch. He lives there with his wife, Maggs, their young daughter, Annie, and Patrocino, the Mexican segundo. When a young hired hand, possibly an escaped convict, vanishes with Annie's pony, Gideon goes after him. Arriving in sub-zero temperatures in the former mining town of Columbine, he is run off by the man's mother, Ruth Logan, the cigar-smoking owner of the Miner's Delight Saloon. But later, when Gideon is left unconscious in the snow, Ruth is the one who saves his life. Giving up, Gideon returns home in time to find that a vigilante group is also searching for the hired hand--apparently successfully, since he is found lynched. This news brings Ruth Logan on a mission of vengeance, and, as the hangings continue, leads Gideon to fear for the safety of his entire family.
