Review A lonely but independent widow and a man hellbent on revenge. In the third book of The Merry Widows trilogy, Theresa Michaels brings readers a heartwarming, bittersweet tale of love. Sarah Ann Westfall and Rio Santee have nothing in common except a fierce need to be cared for and loved. Sarah is terrified when Rio first arrives at her house in the dead of night. He uses his half-Apache heritage to scare her, but Sarah is not so easily frightened. Although she would gladly shoot Rio, she can't turn her back on his two young sons. So she opens her house and loses her heart to a man who has nothing to offer her. Rio has lost his wife, his home and his livelihood. He will not lose his sons again. Hunted because of his Apache blood, he is determined to seek revenge on the men who destroyed his life. He never counted on caring for the beautiful, headstrong Sarah. Whatever his feelings for her, he knows there can be no future for them. Sarah finishes The Merry Widows trilogy in a most satisfying way.
