Five-year-old Donald Ayers was captured by a band of Apaches and carried off to their mountain retreat in Mexico. Picked on by the other boys of the band, he struggled to become better at their skills than they were. His constant fighting back led them to call him Emberatto (the bad-tempered one). After many failures he escaped, returning to Texas to discover his parents had moved to California. His Apache training helped him to cross half a continent in search of them.
