Irish novelist KT McCaffrey's latest offering in his investigative reporter Emma Boylan series could be his breakout book. Emma is celebrating her Journalist of the Year Award when she hears of a fatal accident in Lonsdale, one of Dublin's less fashionable suburbs. A car has crashed the barriers of a viaduct, killing the parish priest and seriously injuring another person. What first appears to be a tragic accident soon becomes a murder enquiry. Emma has barely begun working the case when the killer strikes again. Drawn through a maze of suspicion and intrigue, she looks to the past for clues. Back in the 1960s, 35 girls perished in their school-dorm when a midnight fire raged through the building. A diary that details events from that time is the catalyst for the evil now stalking the streets. As clue after clue falls into place, Emma unwittingly places her own life in mortal danger.
