"Port of Culture "is a showcase of images from a three-year photographic project undertaken by Peter Carr which sought to capture the city of Liverpool in an alternative light. A specialist in High-Dynamic Range photography, Carr uses a technique which enables photographers to record a broader range of tonal detail--ultimately producing a painterly quality to the image. The end results are the incredibly dynamic images included in this collection, each one capturing one of the many moods of the city--from scenes of protest to the opaque and glassy waterfront to local architecture, old and new. A visually stunning volume, "Port of Culture" reveals the astonishing creativity of this young photographer--whose work is exhibited in more than sixty images--providing a wholly refreshing take on a city evolving before our eyes.
