Authors Gary and Joy Lundberg, who wrote the bestselling book - "I Don't Have to Make Everything All Better," have given readers another gift on how to improve family relationships, but this time you will not only be taught, but entertained. They've diverted from the norm and have written their new book as a novel, titled "Meeting Amazing Grace", with the subtitle "Wisdom for all Families and In-laws." The book gets its title from one of the main characters, Grandma Grace, who is, in a most charming way, truly amazing. But of course the intended double meaning is there, because as you read - and think about the concepts each encounter teaches - you can't help but come face-to-face with that other grace as well.

Through the means of the supernatural the book takes you on an unusual path of discovery. You may be pleasantly surprised to find solutions to your own challenges as you step into the lives of families facing dramatic, yet all-too-common, dilemmas. It's almost as if you have a crystal ball showing you what can be done to bring peace and love between you and your own family members and in-laws. And we are all in-laws of one kind or another. You will see how the clashing of personalities and differing family traditions and beliefs can be transformed into loving, rich relationships.
