A home implies an active combination and interaction of many elements. This is a passionate challenge for any architect, one that requires the use of his or her entire “craft” and professional resources to achieve an objective. But it even goes beyond that; it also involves a deep personal and emotional investment with the design theme and the incredible responsibility associated with it. With this perspective in mind, it is highly rewarding to analyze how each architect reached the different design solutions presented on the following pages. One discovery is that of a common denominator: that diversity is what drives and characterizes contemporary architecture as an expression of the times we live in.
