Molly is facing a new future. She hasn't worked for seven years--well, not technically, although looking after a demanding family has been trial enough. And given her recent multi-tasking at home as nurse, chef and peace negotiator, surely she'd be a catch for any employer? Her ex-boss is persuaded to give her work filming a documentary starring a cantankerous eighty-three-year-old actress called Florence Bird. As filming progresses Molly realizes how complicated life can be. But despite their differences Molly and Florence forge a remarkable friendship--one that helps them both confront their fears and answer the all-important question, how long have you got?
